How did the Fund perform last year and what affected its performance?

Class A shares of the Fund returned 21.77% (unadjusted for sales charges) for the period ended September 30, 2026. The Fund's broad-based index, the Russell 1000® Index, returned 15.01% for the same period, while the Fund's additional, more narrowly based index, the Russell 1000® Value Index, returned 23.81%.

Broadly speaking, the Fund's underperformance reflected its emphasis on lower-beta stocks, which underperformed at a time in which investors displayed a clear preference for higher-momentum, faster-growing companies. (Beta measures a security's sensitivity to the movements of the market as a whole.)

At the sector level, stock selection within information technology played the largest role in the Fund's underperformance. An overweight in Cognizant Technology Solutions Corp. (1.9%), which lagged on worries that its business would be hurt by AI, was the most notable detractor. Zero weightings in a number of stocks benefiting from the AI infrastructure buildout, including Intel Corp., Sandisk Corp., and Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., also detracted. On the plus side, information technology was also home to the Fund's three leading individual contributors: Dell Technologies, Inc. (1.1%), Hewlett Packard Enterprise Co. (2.0%), and Applied Materials, Inc. (0.5%). All were seen as winners from the development of AI.

The Fund also underperformed in the consumer discretionary, industrials, and consumer staples sectors. Boyd Gaming Corp. (1.5%), Leidos Holdings, Inc. (0.3%), and Kraft Heinz Co. (3.0%) were the largest detractors, respectively, in the three categories.

The Fund produced the strongest relative performance in health care. The drug development company Viatris, Inc. (1.6%), which rose on the strength of better-than-expected earnings, rising sales in Asia, and optimism about its pipeline, was the top contributor. Several large-cap pharmaceutical stocks, including Merck & Co., Inc. (3.1%), Bristol Myers Squibb Co. (3.3%), and Johnson & Johnson (1.8%), among others, further helped results.

The financials sector was another area of strength, primarily as a result of a zero weighting in Berkshire Hathaway, Inc. and an overweight in State Street Corp. (1.2%). However, some of the benefit was counterbalanced by a position in the financial technology and payments company Fiserv, Inc.,* whose shares came under pressure from concerns about slowing growth.

The Fund also outperformed in communication services. Warner Brothers Discovery, Inc.* was taken over at a premium, and shares of Google parent Alphabet, Inc.* surged behind a series of better-than-expected earnings reports.

Percentages in parentheses are based on the Fund's net assets as of September 30, 2026.

* Not held at September 30, 2026.

Russell 1000® Index measures the performance of the large-cap segment of the US equity universe. It is a subset of the Russell 3000® Index and includes approximately 1,000 of the largest securities based on a combination of their market cap and current index membership. The Russell 1000 represents approximately 93% of the US market. The Russell 1000® Index is constructed to provide a comprehensive and unbiased barometer for the large-cap segment and is completely reconstituted annually to ensure new and growing equities are included.

The Russell 1000® Index is a required broad-based index that represents the Fund's overall equity market.

Russell 1000® Value Index measures the performance of the large-cap value segment of the US equity universe. It includes those Russell 1000 companies with relatively lower price-to-book ratios, lower I/B/E/S forecast medium term (2 year) growth and lower sales per share historical growth (5 years). The Russell 1000® Value Index is constructed to provide a comprehensive and unbiased barometer for the large-cap value segment. The index is completely reconstituted annually to ensure new and growing equities are included and that the represented companies continue to reflect value characteristics.

The Russell 1000® Value Index is a more narrowly based index that the Advisor believes more closely aligns with the Fund's investment strategy.

Index returns do not reflect any fees or expenses and it is not possible to invest directly into an index.

Stocks may decline in value.
